National Park Service news

Technical Preservation Services will launch a new series of case studies of successful tax incentives projects beginning in September.

Titled Case-Study Snapshots, the new e-newsletter will illustrate the flexibility inherent in the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation and how they have been used and applied to all kinds of historic rehabilitation projects and circumstances. These case studies will highlight projects involving topics such as the preservation of existing, and the creation of new, affordable and market-rate housing; the adaptive reuse and conversion of buildings to new uses; creative and innovative reuses of difficult-to-adapt buildings and property types; retrofit of historic buildings to be more sustainable, energy efficient, and resilient; economic development and community revitalization through historic rehabilitation; accessibility; and other rehabilitation issues and challenges.

Case-Study Snapshots will be sent to all subscribers. We will continue to publish the periodic Technical Preservation Services News that includes updates and information about guidance, publications, trainings, and other information related to the Federal Historic Preservation Tax Incentives Program and the Secretary of the Interior's Standards.

Recent Publication

Don Rypkema recently released report: The YIMBY Movement: Historic Preservation's Response - PlaceEconomics, an evidence-based case for historic districts and the retention of older housing.

The report reflects upon previously made arguments of density being achievable through retention of historic neighborhoods, rather than through new high density development. The report concludes that preservationists can “make a reasoned, evidence-based case for historic districts and the retention of older housing to those YIMBYs who are actually for neighborhoods that are diverse, affordable, and inclusive. Because that’s what the historic districts in most American cities actually are.”

YIMBY movement – “Yes in my Backyard” (opposed to NIMBY – “Not in my Backyard”).
